

CAVE-WOMAN BETTY

Lyrics and music © Jack Williams

Cave woman Betty
Hair down over her eyes,
Is starin' in your window,
She's got a very big surprise...
She says she knew you when
The years were not so well defined,
You oughta drop back to see her...
If only you can find the time.
She says you're not so smart
For turnin' human after all,
And she hopes you can recover
As the rain begins to fall.

Cave woman Betty
Can look down into your soul.
She sees there's nothing happening there
Inside that gaping hole.
She talked at length with Stalin
With Hitler, Bush, bin Laden, too
But they're all in the seventh circle
And she's got a lot to ask of you
She says if you're so wonderful,
Then why are you so small?
And your world grows even smaller
As the rain begins to fall.

As the rain begins to fall... As the rain begins to fall...
As the rain begins to fall... As the rain begins to fall.

Cave woman Betty
Is cursing as she cries
She's starin' into your waters
And the colors in your skies.
She tried her hand at Facebook
Tried the roller derby, too.
She said, "Too bad your world is empty
I gotta go now. There's nothin' I can do."
And she left me here a-bleedin'
With my back against the wall...
Miscalculating everything
As the rain begins to fall.
